THE WEEKENDER GIFT BOXES

Our top selling gift box for friends and family is, perhaps not surprisingly, our top seller for businesses too. We have this crazy idea that we should send the same food to our client as we would to grandma. The problem is, with most business gift companies you can't. The food you find for corporate gifts is drastically different than what humans normally eat. It's got dumbed down flavor. Shrunk little jars of mysterious goo. Scary old popcorn. Waxy chocolate.

The Weekender suffers none of those problems. It's packed full of foods I keep at home on a regular basis and sweets I like to eat when I'm in the mood. They're all full sized versions, full of flavor. When you send this to a client it never looks like you skimmed, never looks like you cut corners.

THE WEEKENDER

Hand assembled in our cartooned gift box (illustrated), it has a loaf of Zingerman's Farm Bread, a no-nut Black Magic Brownie, a Ginger Jump-Up Molasses Cookie, Holy Cow Beef Sticks, Zingerman's Peanut Brittle, a half pound of our Nor'easter Cabot Cheddar and a nosh-sized version of our extremely popular, extremely good Sour Cream Coffee Cake.

THE COFFEE CAKE THAT CHANGED THE GAME

"DUE TO CURRENT BUSINESS TRENDS 99% OF OUR AGENDA TIME WILL BE SPENT EATING COFFEE CAKE."

OUR BEST SELLERS

Coffee cakes have been our best selling gift since we started mailing food in the early 1990s. Having tried a truckload of coffee cakes in the past two decades I can say quite honestly that I haven't tasted one I like better. I think the same goes for a lot of our customers—many folks return year after year to send this gift and this gift only. It's substantial, it's honest, it's straightforward, and it's really good. I guarantee you really can taste the difference.

THE ICING IS NOT ON THE CAKE

Zingerman's coffee cake is made without icing. This makes it look like an oddball compared to most coffee cakes out there. Nothing against icing—I like a cupcake as much as the next person—but too many times icing is a ruse. It's an atmospheric distraction. It diverts your attention from the sub par ingredients that make up the land mass below. Plus, for many folks, me included, it's too sweet. Our coffee cake tastes like rich sour cream, butter, toasted walnuts and cinnamon. There's just enough sweetness, which makes it go down easily, especially with coffee.

WHAT ABOUT THAT PAN?

You can't make a Zingerman's coffee cake without a bundt-style pan, the pan with the hole in the middle. It conducts heat to the interior of the cake—if the hole wasn't there, the middle would stay raw and collapse in a soggy puddle. The bundt pan we know was created by Nordic Ware in Minnesota in the 1950s at the request of Rose Joshua and Fannie Schanfield, two members of Minneapolis's Hadassah Jewish women's group, who were nostalgic for dense European cakes.

MOST POPULAR WEEKEND TREAT

Cinnful Cinnamon Rolls

Almost anyone can make a cinnamon roll smell good while it's baking, even among the cell phone kiosks at the mall. Unfortunately, most have little more than aroma to offer. You won't taste much beyond sugar and cinnamon. The real challenge is to fashion a cinnamon roll that tastes as good as it smells. These fit the bill. Warm them up, break one open and put your nose up close. You'll smell sweet butter, Indonesian cinnamon, real vanilla. But the real treat is next. Take one bite. That's all you'll need to forget the litany of cinnamon roll disappointments life has dealt you. Comes with serving instructions.

Today our deli is known as a mecca for great food. Zingerman's is now several distinct businesses full of artisan bakers, cheesemakers, chefs, candy makers and coffee roasters.
